So, we anticipate that numbering the number of funded candidates increasing here in the near future. So, that's I think that's about all I've got, unless Mr. Chairman, unless you've got unless you or any Commissioners have any questions or if anybody else Gina, Mike. CHAIRMAN PATON: Actually, this is Commissioner Paton now. MR. COLLINS: Yeah. CHAIRMAN PATON: I do have a question or, I guess, it's really a concern for Tom and for Gina. I was, kind of during some of these elections when the across the country when these it seems like after the after the election day, things go on on weeks and weeks and weeks mainly because people are dropping off their early ballots. I was wondering if we could coordinate something with the Secretary of State reminding people that things would go faster if they would get their early ballots in early. Is there some kind of public some kind	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23	Relatedly, in a more in a more directed effort, we've tried and I've tried to in forums where we're engaging directly with the press specifically, we've tried to stress that we have to that in order to properly cover elections at this point, because of the expansion of vote by mail, we need to both there needs to be attention paid by reporters to why the delay exists in the first place. In other words, we can engage in public education on the issue as much as we can, but unless but if the if the press and this is this has been this is something that everyone from, you know, sort of nationally recognized election, you know, sort of professor ivory tower types down to, obviously, the election officials that we work with recognize that if the if the education efforts on that issue do not see a corresponding treatment by the press to prepare the public to understand why delays are happening, they won't be as effective. So, we have you know. So, I've tried, for example, in forums where I'm more likely to interact with reporters, to hit that point again and again. So, you know, it's, sort of, a two-prong issue.
	of advertising advertising campaign that we could coordinate with the Secretary of State? I just think		One, what's the public's perception, how can we address it through our through our paid and earned efforts;

So, that's that's, sort of, my answer, which is it's not a I know it's not really, like,
